DragonWave Inc. (TSX:DWI) has won a deal with a major telecommunications provider in Lebanon, Cedarcom, which will use the Ottawa-based company's microwave radio system for its mobile broadband Internet service.

Cedarcom, which is the first wireless operator to deploy the high-performance multiprotocol label switching, or MPLS, Internet services in the Middle East, said it has selected DragonWave's Horizon Compact system to deliver Ethernet backhaul throughout its Mobi and WiMAX networks. The company serves both business and residential customers in major cities throughout Lebanon.

DragonWave's technology will allow the Beirut firm to expand its mobile broadband Internet access service, which uses radio waves to allow customers to connect to the Internet without the need for Wi-Fi hotspots or wires.
